

It's fall of 2016, and there's enough war, want, sickness, oppression, and political vitriol roiling in our world to make us all tilt our heads in wonder, and stir up some sleepless nights.

As editors who get to work with writers and readers from around the world, though, it is our experience that the substantial majority of them—in all corners—are inquisitive and compassionate people who wish no harm to others, who want to live in a peaceful world.

In the face of so many troubles, it seems worth remembering: most people, despite the racket that would suggest otherwise, are, at their core, decent human beings.

Looking forward,

A handwritten signature in black ink, reading "Linda K. Simon". The signature is written in a cursive, flowing style with a long horizontal flourish at the end.